To Whom It May Concern:

I for one do not consider it unfair for Microsoft to bundle "goodies" with their operating system, so long as nobody is compelled to use them.

Their competitors are free to make their own products as attractive to the consumer as possible. But they don't seem to be prepared to give anything away "for free", yet they have the nerve to ask the federal government to use its resources to dismantle a company that this country should be so very proud of.

There are matters of greater moment that the department of justice and this government should be devoting their resources to. Let us not shoot ourselves in the foot for the sake of a few greedy CEOs and jealous States.
